Reid and Riege business litigators are experienced in a broad range of litigation, including employment, real estate, probate, intellectual property, environmental and bankruptcy matters that are described in detail in other firm practice descriptions.

In addition, Reid and Riege has long represented mid-size, closely held corporations, partnerships, and limited liability companies. The owners of such entities occasionally fall into disagreements over governance, ownership and the sharing of benefits that companies generate. Such disputes sometimes arise with generational changes in ownership. Reid and Riege attorneys are often called upon to help disentangle such relationships when they no longer function as intended, and we prosecute and defend shareholder litigation when warranted.

In addition, we handle the full range of litigation that might entangle a company, including:

- claims of breach of contract;
- disputes about non-competition agreements;
- claims of unfair competition; and
- insurance and reinsurance issues.
